Born in Columbus, Mississippi, in 1996, Amy Renee Webb's art is deeply influenced by her experiences growing up in the religiously and politically charged landscapes of the South. Through the incorporation of her grandmother's sentimental kitsch landscapes, Webb creates a nuanced exploration of the contradictions of love, fear, and longing in her overlooked home community.

In Rural Omens, Webb's figurative works juxtapose nostalgia with unease, offering a deeply personal reflection on identity and belonging while also addressing universal themes of transformation and resilience.

This exhibition reflects Webb's relationship with home, blending her grandmother's landscapes with her own to honor the past while questioning it. Her work explores the dualities of tradition and change, revealing the raw, emotional layers of rural life.

ALLGORITHM is proud to present Rural Omens as part of its ongoing commitment to showcasing artists whose work confronts the complexities of identity and cultural narrative. This exhibition invites viewers to engage with the nuanced perspectives of rural life while reflecting on their own connections to community and self.
